The Daimon Being Seen

Thomas Moore said in "Care of the soul": If your Daimon is not acknowledged, it might turn into the demon and become your strongest obsession.

What is very important to understand, is:

- The calling needs to be seen so it can grow down into life in a safe way.
- The genius needs mentoring and guidance.
- We need to seek lovers and mentors and friends that we may be seen and blessed.
- The genius is passionate, inwardly or outwardly and therefore contains Eros and pure life energy.

It needs an eye that is able to perceive the potential. Perception bestows blessing. Seeing is believing- believing in what you see- and this instantly confers belief to whoever, whatever receives your sight. The gift of sight surpasses the gift of insight. For such sight blesses: it does transformative work.

John Keats writes: „I know nothing but the holiness of the heart's affections and the truth of imagination." His phrase provides the transhuman ground for the art of mentoring. Mentoring begins when your imagination can fall in love with the fantasy of another. Two acorns on the same branch echoing similar ideals.

Caretakers and parents cannot also be mentors. The rules and duties differ. It is enough to a parent to keep a roof over our head and food on the table; to get us up and off to school. Providing a cave of security, a place for regressions, is not a small job. Freed of this task, the mentor has only one: to recognize the invisible load we carry and to have a fantasy about it that corresponds with the image in the heart. One of the most painful errors we make is to expect from a parent a mentor's vision and blessing and strict teaching, or expecting from a mentor shelter and concern for our human life.
